Perhaps, each member needs to be patient, tolerant as well as ready to share in order to live in harmony with other people in a multigenerational family. In the first place, patience is one of necessary qualities a person should have. Living with many people, including our grandparents, uncles, aunts and cousins under one roof means that we have to wait our turn for everything. For example, we may wait to use the bathroom. Next, each person needs to be tolerant to get along with other members in a large family. Those who live in the same house often disagree over things such as house rules, what TV show to watch or bedtime. As a result, conflicts often occur. However, if people learn to be tolerant, they can live happily together. Lastly, being able to share with other people is very important to maintain the harmony in extended families. Due to living with lots of people, we have to share almost everything from the food to the bedrooms. In addition, we may share our responsibilities with other individuals in our family. In short, it is essential for all people to be aware of the importance of the family and form some certain qualities to live harmoniously together.
